In the main body of the report, the populations for the cities covered had necessarily to be estimated from the ole have reason to feel much respect figures shown by the census of 1800 and and love for Colonel Chandler, who never 1900, and some subsequent state censuses. Now that the figures for 1910 are available, it is evident that the populations of the cities in 1908 can be estimated with a much greater degree of accuracy. For this reason the per capita figures based upon such revised estimates Mrs. Hiram Perry of Hancock has as shown in the appendix, will be of sen a guest of her daughter, Mrs. C. Per Capita Net Debt.

The report explains that by net debt meant the gross debt less sinking fund assets. On the revised estimate cities that have grown more rapidly than had been allowed for by the earlier estimate of the bureau have reduced their per capita net debt. Thus, the per capita net debt for New York City at the close of 1908 was $153.02, instead of $157.74 as previously amounced; for Detroit, barn in the rear of the creamery plant $22.95 instead of $26.02; and for Sacramento, $28.58, instead of $37.77.

Those cities that have grown less rap idly than had been anticipated have a orrespondingly higher per capita net lebt on the revised estimate. For example, the revised per capita net debt for Joseph, Mo., is $36.95, instead of and for Joplin, Mo., $12.67 instead of $8.89. The last-named city has been credited with having had in 1908 the smallest per capita net debt of any city n the country of more than 30,000 popu ation, but on the revised estimate that honor falls to Johnstown, Pa., with a debt of $9.71 per capita. On the revised estimate, the cities of over 300,000 population in 1908 with the highest per capita net debt were: New York, $153.02; Cincinnati, $125.40; and Boston, 814.63. Those with the lowest ments. per capita net debt were: Detroit, $22.95;
